STONE MOUNTAIN CONFEDERATE MEMORIAL

The hills and vales of Georgia
Where birds in blossoms dream,
King Cotton waves his flags of white
And golden nuggets gleam.
Where roses bloom the sweetest
For the Daughters of the South,
And o'er the juicy melon
The darkey smacks his mouth.
Health and wealth, that fails her never—
Queen of Dixie Land Forever.

STONE MOUNTAIN.

Stone Mountain, sixteen miles northeast of Atlanta, Ga., is the largest solid body of granite in the world. It stands alone in midst of a plain, nearly 1,000 feet high, seven miles around the base, and a mile to the summit up the sloping side. It is older than the Rocky Mountains, the Appalachian Mountains, the Alps, or the Himalayas. On the north side, which is an almost perpendicular precipice, the greatest monument of all time is now being carved in memory of the soldiers of the Southern Confederacy. It will consist of a central or reviewing group, representing the Confederate High Command, and groups of infantry, cavalry, and artillery. The equestrian figures in the central group will be as tall as a ten-story building. Below the central group, a great Memorial Hall, to be dedicated to the women of the Confederacy, will be carved out of solid granite at the base of the mountain, every architectural detail consisting of solid granite, undetached from the mother lode, so that Memorial Hall will endure as long as the mountain endures.
